process Share via e-mail Herald Editorial March 17, 2013 The Massachusetts Legislature's budget director, Kevin Murphy, said a new budgeting process must be developed in order to create an effective and responsible capital budget. For Murphy, a 47-year-old budget director who has been overseeing state spending since 2007, the capital budget is a “signature” of the state’s fiscal management, in effect its “heart.” The challenges facing capital budgeting as a whole are daunting, because there is no consensus on how to accomplish it. From the governor on down, the budget director has been describing capital spending for the state as a crucial and often misunderstood element of an overall budget, and when possible, a painful one as well. Yet capital spending also accounts for only about 3 percent of the budget. The remainder is devoted largely to regular expenditures, including the cost of running state agencies, pensions, and health care for retirees. Because the state has no line-item veto, any cuts it makes in the capital budget are
